sophisticated weapons. He said that if the space defense plan were canceled, this would open the possibility of agreement tween the superpowers on a major reduction of strategic and me-

Spanish officials said they were delighted with the progress of talks with Mr. Gromyko, who has played down Moscow's criticism of Spain's decision to remain in the North Atlantic Treaty Organiza-

Mr. Moran said there was "absolutely no pressure" when the question of continued Spanish member-ship in NATO was raised twice during talks with Mr. Gromyko. Spanish government sources said Madrid was left with the impression that Moscow had now come to terms with Spanish membership in the alliance, which it joined in 1982. A referendum on NATO membership is due next year.

Mr. Gromyko's visit was the first high-level contact between Madrid and Moscow since Prime Minister Felipe Gouzález decided in September to urge continued Spanish membership in NATO, reversing ocialist Party policy. Mr. Gromyko, who met Mr.

Zimbabwe Graves May Hold Missing 6

HARARE Zimbabwe (WP) — Government investigators have located graves in southwestern Matabeleland that they believe may contain the bodies of six foreign tourists abducted here by armed insurgents in July 1982, diplomatic sources said Friday.

They said the minister of state for security, Emmerson Munangagwa, has told diplomats from the United States, Britain and Australia that forensic experts were sent to the southern city of Bulawayo earlier this week to examine remains from two grave sites. Diplomatic sources reautioned that the case was still far from resolved. "We've been on this form two and one half years and we've had a lot of false alarms," a diplomat

The kidnapped tourists, all of whom were men, included two Amer, cans, two Britons and two Australians. Their abduction was one of the earliest acts of political terrorism in Zimbabwe after Prime Minister Robert Mugabe dismissed from his cabinet the opposition leader, Joshus Nkomo. Mr. Nkomo was his former political ally and a fellow leader of the successful liberation struggle against white minority rule here.

Aguino Defendants Excused by Court

MANILA (AP) — Judges hearing evidence against 25 military men and one civilian accused in the assassination of the Philippine opposition leader, Benigno S. Aquino Jr., ruled Friday that the defendants do not have to attend the trial, citing a precedent set by Mr. Aquino himself.

The three-judge panel ruled that the accused need appear only when called "for purposes of identification." Justice Augusto Amores, who wrote the ruling, said that all defendants would have to appear when testimony resumes Monday because a witness at the assassination scene may have to identify some of them.

The court cited a 1975 case in which Mr. Aquino refused to participate in a military trial in which he was accused of conspiring to seize power from President Ferdinand E. Marcos, who was then ruling under martial law. Prison guards brought Mr. Aquino to court each day until the Supreme Court upheld his plea not to appear.

Bangladesh to Vote on Ershad's Rule

DHAKA, Bangladesh (Reuters) - President Mohammed Hussain Ershad banned on Friday all political activity and said he would hold a referendum March 21 to seek a vote of confidence on his policies. Lieutenant General Ershad told the nation he was reimposing martial

In a vote of 263 to 7, with nine abstentions and one null, the deputies late Thursday approved a parliamentary investigating commission's conclusion that charges that Mr. González received a satchel of money-from the Flick conglomerate were false.

The charges were made in October by a West German legislator in what he later said were jesting and misreported comments related to a scandal in West Germany. Mr. González, who was present in the Cortes, said afterward that the whole case was a "miserable polemic." He added: "I am the person who has the most tranquil conscience in this debate and I will maintain the answers that I gave in the month of November because I can stand by them and no one can show the contrary."

Breakaway Democrats Form Council

WASHINGTON (NYT) — In defiance of the national party leadership, a group of Democratic officeholders from the South and West have announced the formation of an independent council to help shape party policy and rules.

Organizers of the group, the Democratic Leadership Council, said.

Thursday that many elected officials who viewed the national party as a political liability in their regions had expressed council. political liability in their regions had expressed support for the initiative. We view the council not as a rival to any other party entity but as a way station or bridge back into the party for elected Democrats," said Representative Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri, who will serve as chairman of the organization.

Other leaders include Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia, Senator Lawton Chiles of Florida, Representative James R. Jones of Oklahoma, Governor Charles S. Robb of Virginia and Governor Bruce Babbitt of Arizona. So far, they said, the council's membership includes 10 governors, 14 senators and 18 representatives, many of whom want to push the party in a more conservative direction after last year's overwhelming victory by President Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Nunn suggested that the group would go beyond policy questions and attempt to change party rules to encourage moderate candidates to upete for the Democratic presidential nomination. Both Mr. Gephardt and Mr. Robb have been mentioned as possible candidates in 1988. "The moderate and conservative Democrats didn't make it past the first round in the primaries in 1984 and we want to change that," Mr. Nunn said.

Essentially, there now is no income limit, but a student must demonstrate a financial

Under Mr. Reagan's budget, there also would be a $4,000 annual limit on any student's total federal assistance. By contrast, students can now receive up to $11,000 from various federal sources.

In other remarks, the president decried a "learning gap" between students in the United States and in the Soviet Union, where he said children are taught algebra and geometry in elementary school. He called for a back-to-basics curriculum to ensure that all students "become fully convergant with science and math, as well as history, reading and writing." He also urged a return to "discipline" in classrooms, saying "there's no need to call in a grand jury every time a principal needs to check a student locker."

of chemical weapons.

"It was designed for a different war and a different fight plan," he said. "We do not have a militarily usable retaliatory capability." The administration is seeking $174 million in fiscal year 1986, beginning Oct. 1, to produce new chemical weapons that it says are necessary to deter a Soviet nerve gas attack in Europe. Similar pleas have been rejected in the past three years, and congressional opponents in both chambers expect a bitter fight over the weapons system, in President Ronald Reagan's $313-billion military budget.

The size of the U.S. stockpile is classified, but it is generally be-lieved to number 35,000 to 45,000 tons (16 kilotons to 20 kilotons). This would be less than one-twentieth of what the Pentagon estimates the Soviet arsenal to be. Military experts say that little of the U.S. arsenal is usable because the Army no longer stocks weapons designed years ago to deploy the gas.

Mr. Reagan, pledging his "vigor-ous efforts" to correct the "asym-metry" in superpower stockpiles, sent a letter Tuesday to the Armed Services Committee chairman, Senator Barry M. Goldwater, an Artzona Republican, in which he emphasized his commitment to "regaining a chemical warfare deterrent." Mr. Welch, who heads the Pentagon's chemical weapons division, led a panel of military officials who described what they thought would happen if deterrence failed. A retired general, Frederick J. Croesen, former commander of grand jury has indicted a couple from Missouri for illegally exporting an anti-tank missile-guidance system and other advanced military equipment to South Africa and other foreign countries, the U.S. Customs Service has announced.

The indictment, announced Thursday, charges that Werner Ernst Gregg and his wife, Roswitha L. Gregg exported the equipment from 1980 to 1984 without obtaining the licenses required under laws that regulate the export of military items or of high-technology items that could be used in weapons.

The indictment also charges that the Greggs failed to report more than $1 million of income on their federal tax returns over the same period. The Greggs surrendered to U.S. marshals Thursday.

Bond was set at $400,000 for Mr. Gregg and $100,000 for Mrs. Gregg by Magistrate Calvin Hamilton in U.S. District Court in Kansas City, Missouri, according to Custom Service officials.

A customs agent said that the indictment stemmed from a two-and-a-half-year investigation that was triggered by information supplied by "a disgruntled employee."
Customs officials brought the indictment to the attention of reporters following complaints by the Commerce Department that customs agents have been dilatory in pursuing tips about illegal exports. Europe, Don't Despair

Does Europe have an inferiority complex, or is it really inferior? Ronald Reagan ascribes the strength of the dollar to poor European performance, Margaret Thatcher laments the time it takes to revive an ailing economy. A top-level business meeting in Switzerland diagnoses fundamental weakness. If the patient is not sinking — which General George Marshall rightly feared in 1947 — it is held to need intensive care.

We believe the reports of terminal sickness in Europe are premature. America's rejuvenation is being hyped up while Europe's successes are played down. A few years ago the story was different.

In the early 1960s, the talk was of a widening technology gap, of the United States outdoing Europe. This never happened, and America passed into its own troubled time. Now it is Europe's turn. Fashion changes as fast in economic analysis as in baute couture.

Is there, today, a difference in the essence of the two continents - a distinction in nature rather than degree? Europe's achievements in the nuclear power and aircraft industries, to take but two examples, hardly suggest so. Nor, except in the short term, does the macroeconomic record.

Through the 1960s and 70s, Europe outpaced the United States in terms of the per capita growth of gross national product and the proportion of that growth devoted to productive investment. It was Europe that had the higher rate of saving, and it was the United States that had to devalue its currency because it could not earn enough from abroad to finance the outflow of capital to more profitable countries.

In recent years, the superior U.S. record in output, jobs and price stability shows that the wheel is turning again. But this appears to be the result of U.S. policy changes, not of deep-seated structural differences between the two continents. It is only natural that you wring out inflation, as the Fed has done through its monetary policy, and then impart major stimulus to demand, as the Reagan administration has done by moving into large budget deficits.

Do profound differences in personal behavior explain the divergent trends of recent years? This is far from clear. Europeans still want the things that money (and credit) can buy. There has been no sudden loss of the work ethic. There is no great gap between the comportment of labor union chiefs on the two sides of the Atlantic. On both sides they ask for high-productivity jobs in manufacturing (service jobs are frowned on), rising public investment, and safety nets for the poor; on both sides they oppose labor market flexibility, which is seen as cutting real wages and union power. The only differ ence is that unions have obtained their wishes less often in America; the U.S. government has been less accommodating. Arguably this reflects a weaker union position in America, but this is not fundamental: The unions are weakening in Europe too.

Europe has much to do. Capital markets ought to be allowed to work more freely. Regulations that limit initiative should be relaxed. Rigid wage rules must be eased. Above all, the countries of the European Community and the European Free Trade Association, which outweigh America in population and about equal it in production, need to make a reality of their free-trade arrangements, breaking down barriers that prevent their high-technology industries from enjoying the benefits that a single market confers on their American counterparts.

Steady progress in these fields can work miracles. In a few years, the geographical balance of pessimism can shift enormously. Temporarily out of sorts, Europe should not become prey to melancholy.

The MX in the Real World

Congress should remove the fence it placed around the $1.5 billion needed to produce the second batch of 21 MX missiles. It is one of attack. This is the very definition of the Soviet those close questions that turn out finally not to be close. Everyone knows the limitations of this 10-warhead machine. It is provocative and destabilizing: provocative because its high accuracy gives it a first-strike potential, destabilizing because its relative vulnerability might tempt a president to use it early in a crisis rather than risk losing it to a Soviet first strike. In a world where strategic decisions were based on qualities of weapons alone, this would be enough to doom the MX. But the real world is a different place.

The real world is a place where things have not only qualities but connections. The MX is connected in the first instance to the heavy Soviet missiles, the more than 600 SS-18s and SS-19s whose first-strike capability it is meant to match. Granted, the new weapons ordered up in the Ford and Carter years are now nearing deployment and so the moment is passing, but the fact is that the United States has no heavy missiles of its own.

The MX is further connected to the arms control talks that are to open March 12 in Geneva. A prime American purpose there is to induce the Kremlin to make deep reductions in the heavy missiles that have long given it, and threat. No one in his right mind can believe the Russians would reduce these extra-threatening heavy missiles - the numerical and political heart of their strategic force - if they did not have to worry about a similar American threat. Ronald Reagan thinks this. Andrei Sakharov thinks it too. Absent a successful anti-missile defense, this is what deterrence is all about.

Mr. Reagan has been criticized for failing to keep arms-building and arms control in rea-sonable balance. Whether in his overall policy he is now heading toward such a balance is a fair question. On the MX, however, he has a record. Many times he has said the missile is essential for defense purposes. On July 16, 1983, he said: "If an agreement is reached which calls for deep reductions - which, of course, is our goal — the number of [MX] missiles could certainly be adjusted downward. ... As opportunities permit, the U.S. position will continue to evolve." That statement reflects the obvious and sensible consideration that American forces are necessarily related to Soviet forces. A freshening of the 1983 statement would surely quash most residual congressional misgivings about the MX.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

More Advice to Ignore?

If President Reagan pays no more attention to his new chief economist than he paid to the last one, his selection of Beryl Sprinkel for the post should do no lasting damage. Mr. Sprinkel, nominated to be chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, is a dogmatic monetarist, given to bashing the Federal Reserve System and foreign finance ministers. He may ruffle feathers, but an adviser has little influence if the advisee does not listen.

The White House says the president will quickly fill all three council seats, and the depleted staff will be rebuilt to "full strength." That's nice. But if Mr. Reagan really cared, he would not have left the chairmanship vacant for seven months; no one was even designated as acting chairman after Martin Feldstein returned to Harvard last summer. Nor would Mr. Reagan have said two months ago that he might want to abolish the council altogether.

The Sprinkel council will surely not commit the sacrilege that Mr. Feldstein committed by disagreeing with the president in public about raising taxes. But Mr. Sprinkel, a Chicago bank economist before becoming the Trea-

Among other things, he spawned the widely discredited argument that big budget deficits do not cause high interest rates, so why worry? stationed strong economists at their elbow — Arthur Burns, Walter Heller, Herbert Stein, Alan Greenspan and Charles Schultze among others. Mr. Reagan makes clear that he has little use for any economists, weak or strong. No one can force a president to listen to unvarnished professional advice if he prefers to rely on instinct and political advisers. As long as Mr. Reagan feels that way, what Mr. Sprinkel says will not make much difference. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

One Who Fell Out Of Step

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON - Nothing is W more heart-rending than the cry of a disenchanted true believer in the Ronald Reagan of yesteryear - if you counted yourself among them. But if you were not of that persuasion, there is also quite a lot that is heartening in an article in the year-end issue of Foreign Affairs by Norman Podhoretz. It is an emotional experience and a rewarding intellectual exercise.

Mr. Podhoretz is the prestigious editor of Commentary magazine, the literary home port of neo-con-servatism. This is a cult largely com-posed of prominent, fallen-away Democrats who thought back in 1980, as Mr. Podhoretz puts it, that they had discovered in Ronald Rea-gan (a former Democrat) "a more legitimate heir to the mainstream democratic tradition in foreign policy — the commitment to containment [of communism] running from Truman through Kennedy. Johnson and the late Sen. Henry Jackson."

And Mr. Podhoretz was pleased with the original thrust of Reagan policy: the avoidance of arms control negotiations that might have "jeopardized" the buildup neces-sary to redress the U.S.-Soviet balance of military power. He liked the way Mr. Reagan went about rekin-dling America's patriotic spirit in the interest of restoring confidence in the utility of military force as an instrument of worthy political pur-poses." He applauded Mr. Reagan's reinstitution of the East-West ideological conflict as the centerpiece of U.S. policy concern — in contrast. to the preoccupations of his predecessors with geopolitical power-balancing or superpower rivalry.

So what's his gripe? That the pure conservatism of Ronald Reagan, as private citizen, has given way to, God help us, the practical political imperatives imposed on a president.

Detente, as practiced by Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger, never lived up to Mr. Podhoretz's hopes. Now, it is Mr. Podhoretz's fear that in his second term, Mr. Reagan. "overwhelmed by the pressures of the political present, and perhaps lured by seductive fantasies of what historians in the future might say of him as a peacemaker ... seems ready to embrace the course of detente wholeheartedly as his own." Warning signs, as Mr. Podhoretz

Mr. Nixon's theory.

Having promised linkage, he unlinked Jimmy Carter's grain embargo from the grand scheme of U.S.-Soviet relations. He caved in on the Siberian natural-gas pipeline to Western Europe out of some mis-guided concern for "alliance solidarity." He would not even bring economic pressure on Poland by declaring the Poles in default on be an invigorating target.

Mr. Reagan hailed the Afghanistan "freedom fighters," but did not do nearly enough to help them, Mr. Podhoretz complains. Mr. Reagan is excused for not toppling the Marxist Sandinist regime in Nicaragua — but only because Congress got in his way. But Mr. Reagan was not even as bold as John Foster Dulles (for whom Mr. Podhoretz has a low regard as a risk-taker) in Lebanon. Worse, "in spite of all the talk about retaliation that came from the Reagan administration, and despite the high priority it had always given to combating international terrorism. when those marines were attacked by terrorists, the United States did nothing."

Mr. Podhoretz grants that under in at least the sense that it would no longer passively acquiesce in the achievement of an irreversible military superiority by the Soviet Union." But he fears it has not been prepared, as it was 20 years earlier under John F. Kennedy, to "pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend."

The truth is, of course, that Mr.
Kennedy himself was not prepared to live by that inaugural rhetoric three months later when he fatally scaled down the U.S. role in the Bay of Pigs. There lies the real flaw in the Podhoretz analysis. His dream is not of a different Democratic Party but of a different day when the United States had overwhelming military superiority, a near-monopoly in nuclear arms.

What Mr. Podhoretz seems to be deploring is that Ronald Reagan, as president, has come to recognize the necessity as a practical matter of reconciling his old ideology with the new realities. Mr. Podhoretz sees Mr. Reagan moving not only to-ward arms control but maybe even broader accord with the Russians on the rules of East-West engage-ment. He sees the president headed toward a deal in Central America, accepting a communist Nicaragua in exchange for something rather like the prescriptions of the Conta-dora countries. If he should "move in this direction, he will cruelly dis-appoint those of us who once hoped that he might lead the Republican Party into assuming a responsibility for resisting Soviet imperialism that he himself had so often and justifi-longer wishing to carry."

And so he might. But that would not be too heavy a price to pay for those of us who believe that if Ronald Reagan should move in the direction Mr. Podhoretz so deplores, he would be on the right track.

For France, A Tragedy Repeated?

By Dominique Moïsi

PARIS — As tension grows in New Caledonia, one is reminded of Karl Marx's remark that history repeats itself, "the first time as trage-dy, the second as farce."

dy, the second as farce."

For France, Algeria was the tragedy. Will New Caledonia be the farce? This tiny South Pacific island, located 23,000 kilometers (14,250 miles) from Paris, is a case unto itself. Given its demographic equilibrium and the size of the European community, which represents nearly 40 percent of the 145,000 inhabitants, any comparison should be with Northern Ireison should be with Northern Ireland, not with Algeria.

Spurred by local injustices, encour aged by a regional environment that seems to foster independence, and prompted by the presence in Paris of a Socialist government haunted by retrospective guilt over the Algerian war, the island's "Kanaks" have called for immediate independence.

New Caledonia embodies contradictory historical logics. Democratic principles and the law of the majority would point to a French future for New Caledonia; but the overpower-ing trend toward decolonization, and the huge distance between the island and France, suggest independence as the long-term solution.

The New Caledonian quagmire is further complicated by domestic, strategic and economic factors.

In France, with legislative elections due next year, the opposition has seized the New Caledonian crisis with delight, only too happy to criti-cize the contradictions and heatstions of the Socialist government.

An unhealthy dialectic of passion between Metropolitan France and New Caledonia is favoring the rise of extremists on both sides. If the proindependence movement was encouraged initially by the uneasiness and guilt feelings of the Socialists, the, anti-independence factions are now playing for time, boping for a return to rightist rule in France.

If the weight of the past hangs over-political debates, the stakes of the future are in every discussion. Can. France give up New Caledonia without losing its middle-power stature, precisely when history appears to be moving toward the Pacific? What would happen if French Polynesia and Guyana were to be lost next, thus jeopardizing French nuclear experiments and the European space program? Worse still, what if New Caledonia were to fall under Soviet influence, becoming a base for regional destabilization?

As pacifist and anti-nuclear waves reach the South Pacific, shaking the stability of the military alliance that binds the United States to New Zealand and Australia, such worries are not altogether frivolous:

Economic factors have also played a negative, if marginal, role. The decline of nickel formines since the There has been a rash of articles in 1969-70 boom has increased the island's dependence on French aid. and aggravated the social climate.

In the face of all this, the Pisani plan, named after France's special envoy to New Caledonia, is an attempt to combine independence and association, to preserve the rights of a sovereign state while protecting the European population and French strategic interests. It appears more and more to be outdated by events.

Edgard Pisani is the likely scapegoat.
It may simply be that independence is not the ideal outcome for New Caledonia. The importance of other minorities (Asian and Polynesian), the tribal realities of the Kanaks in the multiracial society that constitutes New Caledonia, and the existence of divisions within each community, seem to suggest that reinforced autonomy, strengthened by economic and social reform, could be a better outcome for now.

But, as passions mount, both in France and New Caledonia, it may. already be too late for compromise. Some "farces" have tragic endings.

Hosni Mubarak visits in March. The U.S. record in dealing with Egypt in the years after the October 1973 war is one of the rare success stories of the period. Camp David is not "dead." as is often suggested, but rather stands as a building block for a wider peace settlement. Indeed, the agreement this month between the Palestine Liberation Organization and King Hussein of Jordan indicates that the Egyptians are making progress in prodding other Arabs to join the peace process.

A decade ago, extensive aid to Egypt was justified as necessary to help it stand on its own feet. But American help has produced the opposite result: increasing dependence on the United States for food and Thus, the Egyptian authorities, counting on huge shipments of subsiraise the ridiculously low prices at which it sells electricity, water and other services - and as a result cannot finance maintenance. The assumption seems to be that someone else will eventually pay.

Al-though big dividends by the rubber companies in Ceylon are the rule rather than the exception, the amount of 100 percent is striking proof of the flourishing state of the industry.

The shares of many of the Ceylon companies, which have risen to seven times their nominal value, are becoming rather unwieldy, and arrangements are being made for splitting them up. As an instance of the increasing value of rubber estates in Ceylon, a member of English society told the Herald's Colombo correspondent that he knew of three estates for which, about six years ago, a man refused to give £150,000, and which are now worth £600,000.

1935: Hitler's Victory in the Saar

BERLIN - Redeeming the promise he made to the Saarlanders that he would visit them in their first hours of "freedom," Adolf Hitler made his triumphal entry to the Saar [on March 1] and so furnished a climax to the celebration of the return of the province to the Fatherland after sixteen years of separation. If Herr Hitler's visit was a great day for the Saarlanders, it was also a great day in the Führer's life. The return of the Saar represents his first great international victory and the first territorial gain registered by the Reich under the Nazi regime. Herr Hitler made a plea for peace with France: "This is a happy day for Europe, because by the return of the Saar to the Reich the tension between two neighboring nations of Europe has been lifted."

A Libyan Friendship Tilts Hassan to the Tough Side

MARRAKESH, Morocco — Almost everybody who talks about Morocco's surprise treaty of union with Libva tries to explain it as a tactical, temporary move. But not King Hassan II. who signed it last summer. The Moroccan king insists it should be taken very seriously, that it is the beginning of a "fine construc-tion" that will take solid shape within a few months." He plans to visit Tripoli in March to sign a whole series of annexes.

They will include an agreement to submit disputes to the World Court in The Hague, statutes and a budget for a joint secretariat, and accords on economic, cultural and labor matters.

The king was evidently offended by Western reactions of distaste at his sudden link with Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, which conferred a certain legitimacy and respectability on the Libyan troublemaker. But in a long-late-night interview in his ornate palace here, he appeared even more annoyed that his new friendship was being brushed off lightly.

Libya was the main supplier of arms for the Polisano, which has been fighting a guerrilla war for nine years in the Western Sahara, the former Spanish colony that Morocco claims and that the Polisario wants to make independent. King Hassan said that Libyan support had completely ended (which is disputed by some Western sources), and more important, that he can rely on Colonel Qadhafi not to start it up again. He said the Libyan leader "may have his moods, as we all do, but he keeps his word. He is a man of his word." Nor was he concerned by the fact that Algeria has filled the gap and is giving the Polisario even better equipment than it had before. The king said he was "sitting easy," and he did appear very sure of himself.

It is odd that he stressed the durability and growing sturdiness of his Libyan accord, when his foreign ministers went to Washington recently to give assurances that the pact was only transient. But it fits with the tough position he is taking in negotiations with Algeria on the Saharan issue. raeli-Jordanian talks. Algeria has proposed a compromise that would recognize a "personal union" under the Moroccan crown with separate status for the Western Sahara, something like the old Austro-Hungarian dual monarchy. But Hassan is having none of it. He wants to organize a referendum which, he is convinced, would lead to complete absorption by Morocco. He is in no hurry to end the war, and indeed his army and his public appear quite content with the way it is going.

So he is snuggling down with Colo-nel Qadhafi. The king claims credit for arranging the recent release of four Britons imprisoned in Libya. But he does not pretend, as his sup-porters do, that he may tame the Libyan leader, either in terms of stopping terrorism or bringing moderation in Arab arguments about Israel. Instead, Hassan ducked the terror issue, "Do you really think Qadhafi is behind every terrorist act in the world?" he asked sarcastically. As for Arab-Israeli negotiations. he said flatly that the idea of President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt to start direct talks in the United States "doesn't stand a chance." He looks instead for an Arab summit in Saudi Arabia in the next two months. Nobody elsewhere believes the long-delayed summit meeting can be convened any time soon because of the sharp quarrels among the leaders. But Hassan said it would be the place to bring the Arab position "up to date," seeking to implement it and find "bridges" to President Reagan's proposal of September 1982 for Is-

The fact that Israel rejected both the Reagan plan and the 1982 Fez summit plan should put the United States and the Arabs "on the same side," he said. The king gave the impression that he thought Arab and American views he would continue to oppose its return to the Arab League, though he helped obtain Egypt's readmission to the Islamic Conference Organization. He was hard on any compromise in the Saharan war. He spoke warmly of his "special friendship" with the United States, but said it should bring "special understanding."

It's a shame. Hassan has made im-gard to Israel.

portant contributions to promoting moderation in the Arab world. He has been quietly helpful to Israel. Now, instead of restraining Colonel Qadhafi, Hassan appears to be tilting to the tougher side. This is not helpful at a time of delicate diplomacy. The New York Times

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Abe Was Kind — Honest

Regarding the opinion column "Why Americans Remember Lincoln' (Feb. 12) by William Safire:

So much has been researched and written about this great American president that it is difficult to understand a phrase such as "Lincoln chose war," or the assertion that he "was willing to put America through the brutality of ... total war." A careful reading of the first inaugural alone would refute these imputations. And does Mr. Safire really mean to say that the U.S. Constitution—not to say democracy - is "an abstract political theory?" A more just and accurate description of the character of Abraham Lincoln — of his infinite kindness and compassion — which Mr. Salire surely is capable of rendering, would be a valuable service in explaining a major source of the spiritual strength and vitality of democracy in America today. It would also help to fortify freedom for the world of tomorrow.

Returning to Iran

In response to "Internal Unrest Adds to Warring Iron's Miseries" (Feb. 4) by Drew Middleton: For six years I have been reading conflicting reports about Iran. The news of opposition movements brought hope. But after six years of exile, I see nothing but consolidation in Iran. Therefore I have decided to return home. Please do not keep people hoping any longer.

They are trying to force the Mitterrand government into a retreat from its pledge of granting independence to New Caledonia The anti-independence groups are evidently trying to maintain the status quo until the elections in the expectation that the rightists will gain a majority in parliament.

Since last fall, New Caledonia has been in the grip of a conflict between the largely Melanesian groups, known as Kanaks, who are demanding independence from France, and other groups, most of them consisting of European settlers, who are against indepen-

At first, Mr. Pisani seemed to be succeeding in opening indirect ne-gotiations with both groups.

But the killing in January of a ading Melanesian activist by the French police seems to have signaled a turning point. Last week, the defiance of Mr. Pisani's anthority became overt when a group of Europeans pushed past French security police to hold a picnic in an area considered a stronghold of the independentists.

Mr. Pisani ordered the five major organizers of the picuic expelled from New Caledonia. They refused to leave and apparently took refuge somewhere on the island.

Militant Melanesians boycotted primary schools in New Caledonia on Friday in a new blow to Mr. Pisani's efforts, Reuters reported from Nouméa

Mr. Pisani said on the first day of the new primary school year that only 54 percent of the children had turned up at country schools, where Melanesians are the overwhelming majority.

Meanwhile, one of five French settlers ordered to leave the territory Friday emerged from hiding and gave himself up. Emile Lebargy. head of the rightist Parachutists Union, was allowed to return home and was placed under house arrest. Officials said he would be allowed to remain in the territory because his wife is in poor health.

Vietnam Army Journal Cites Troop Indiscipline

Agence France-Presse
HANOI — The Vietnamese Army suffers from indiscipline in the ranks and officer brutality, the army newspaper Quan Doi Nhan Dan has complained.

The Vietnamese Army, whose 1.2 million troops constitute the world's third largest army, behind those of China and the Soviet Union, has been engaged in fight-ing Cambodian guerrillas since November, and they periodically clash with Chinese forces on the border north of here. The Vietnamese Army is also deployed in Laos.

Several articles in the army newspaper have described problems in the ranks. The paper has reminded troops that serious breaches of discipline could result in stringent punishment, and in some cases execution.

The paper recently related that a young Vietnamese soldier slipped away from his regiment to take mapproved home leave. Realizing his wrongdoing, the paper said, he returned to the army to be pun-

White Critic Released by South Africa Urges Boycott

KIBBUTZ MAY'AN BA-RUCH, Israel — Dennis Goldberg, South Africa's longest-serving white political prisoner, called Friday for a tight economic boycott against that country in his first interview since being released.

The 51-year-old anti-apartheid campaigner, who was freed Thursday after 21 years in jail, arrived in Israel on Thursday night. He is staying with his daughter on this remote collective farm on the Lebanese border.

Sentenced to life imprisonment for plotting to overthrow South Africa's white rulers by force, Mr. Goldberg confirmed that he signed an agreement renouncing violence to gain his freedom. I had a most terrible desire to live, to be with my daughter again, to see the light," he said. "I needed to be out of prison." Nelson Mandela and other iailed black leaders of the African Na-they are, I admire them. I have not changed my commitments," he said, dabbing tears from his cheek. "I hope they understand." He was held in a white prison in Pretoria, while Mr. Mandela and the other members of the African National Congress were held on Robben Island, off Cape Town, and later in a prison in Cape Town. Mr. Goldberg strongly attacked the United States and Israel for supporting South Africa and urged the economic boycott. "I believe massive economic action against South Africa would give such a blow," he said, "by owing the bitter condemnation of the world for its indefensible policy of refusing democracy to the Passengers scrambled off the plane. Police and militiamen opened fire. The blast from the jet engines killed an elderly man as the airliner took off for a 20minute flight to Cyprus, trailing an orange escape chute from one of its three open doors.

Radio stations spread the news of the airport's fourth hijacking in seven months, broadcasting control tower conversations to all. Gummen, as usual, brushed aside government security forces and took over the air-

But Akef Haidar, a senior official of the Shiite Moslem militia Amal, who was on the hijacked plane and twisted an ankle on an escape chute, did not dismiss the matter so lightly.

There is a plot to close the airport and suffocate West Beirut," Mr. Haidar said. "A plot that pretends there is no security in order to justify opening a new au port elsewhere," a reference to Christian areas to the northeast,

An official of Air France, one of eight foreign airlines still using the airport, said, "If these local Wild West shows continue, soon nobody will be flying here at all. The last airline to suspend flights to the Beirut airport, which once was the busiest in the Middle East, was Cyprus Airways. It gave up after Feb. 7, when gunmen took over one of its planes on the tarmac and held it and its crew for six hours.

At the point on the airport perimeter where the gunmen drove in, four Lebanese Army soldiers playing cards among the dilapidated bunkers of an old U.S. Marine base said that they could not have stopped them.

"We have a deficiency in men and materials, said Captain Abdel Hamid Darwich, commander of the 327-man army unit that patrols the perimeter.

"The government is neglecting the airport," he said. "It's so easy to get in. We don't have a fence or any obstacles to anything, he it guerrillas or animals.

Captain Darwich said that cables and even airport lights had been stolen.

"When we stopped them by patrolling at night," he said, "they started thieving by day when we were busy elsewhere. He also said that the govern-ment had not responded to his requests for electronic equipment to search passengers for arms and explosives. Spring grass pushing up through the tarmac may soon attract the cows and goats that graze unconcernedly beside the main runway.

The situation so appalled the airport security chief, General Yassin Sweid, that he tendered his resignation four months ago. The Lebanese cabinet is still considering whether to accept it.

QATAR MOVES INTO A NEW ERA OF EDUCATION

HH the Emir addressing the opening assembly.

"Our Nation gained that stature by virtue of being the first Nation to convey the noblest message: encouragement of the pursuit of knowledge, honouring of men of intellect, adoption of highest human values, and intellectual, social and moral principles. "This message was then, and still is, an inexhaustible well for contributing to human development. Our youth should keep these facts in mind and be proud, in order to intensify their determination and confidence in achieving our aspirations to progress."

The opening ceremony of the new campus was attended by Qatar Heir Apparent HH Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa al-Thani, Minister for Education HE Shelkh Mohamed bin Hamad al-Thani. and education ministers of the Cooperation Council of the Arab States of the Guif. Educationists and academics from 30 countries across four

Apart from Unesco director general Dr M'Bow, director general of the Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organisation (Alesco) Dr Mohideen Sabir, and director general of the Arab Bureau of Education for the Gulf States Dr Mohamed Ahmed al Rasheed, were also present.

Built at a cost of over QR700 million, the new campus represents, according to Dr Karnal Kafrawi the architect, "a marriage of modern technology with traditional Islamic design."

Kafrawi has taken great pains to ensure that the new Qatar University campus buildings are not only different in their design concept, but functionally useful for all those who will be using the university campus.

The university buildings are located on a commanding ridge 15km north of Doha and are constructed out of white precast units distinguished by an array of towers derived from traditional wind towers called Badgirs used in the region for February 22 is usually celebrated as the Accession Day and this year marked the 13th Anniversary of HH the Emir's accession as ruler of Qatar. The opening of the new campus of Qatar University on February 23 was thus a part of the Accession Day celebrations.

In his opening address HH the Emir Sheikh Khalifa appealed to the youth of Qatar to pursue knowledge vigorously adopting the highest human values and intellectual, social and moral principles.

"The role of universities is," HH the Emir observed, "to help form creative minds, providing them with ample education, and promoting the virtues of morality and conscientiousness in the individual." HH the Emir noted that the state recognised education as a

'Cotton Club' Leaves Cab Calloway Cold

By Jacqueline Trescott

Washington - In the movie "The Cotton Chib," one scene depicts the band leader Cab Calloway. But while the film by Francis Coppola may have used Calloway's name, it does not use his or the era's real history.

"It was a movie - that's all I can say about it. They made it the way they wanted to make it. They portrayed what they wanted to portray. It was just a movie, and it was a good movie." Calloway said. He said the word "movie" in a flat. noncommittal way, adding at one point, "It's a picture. It could be 'The Seven Dwarfs' and it wouldn't make any difference. It is just a picture." Underneath the neutrality is a tremor of disgruntlement. He has seen the movie five times, mainly at celebrity opening nights, and has been curt in all his assessments. "They were looking to make a few million dollars out of it, as far as I can see. I don't think it was done for any cultural purpose or any other purpose but commercial," he said.

Calloway is one of the giants. He knew the scene of black and white romance and crime.

"The Cotton Club story hasn't been told," he said, emphatically. "The picture wasn't about the Cot-ton Club. The picture was a gang-ster picture." His mammoth laugh tells how simplistic and unfortunate was the result, in his view.

Other black performers who danced and played at the landmark night spot have spoken out about the film's emphasis on the underworld, the focus on a white musician played by Richard Gere, its timidness at exploring how the black talent influenced the times, and the oversimplification of characters in what was a complex racial situation

But Calloway is not going to be drawn into the debate. Asked about a scene where the white owner physically threatens the character played by Gregory Hines, Calloway says only, "That was all wrong. The part where they abused the performers, that never hap-

Prices Still Low for Charles X Furniture

PARIS — The prejudice against French furniture of the early 19th century is so strong that it defies both inflation and the drying up of the market, which has less and less to offer in such areas. Two auctions Wednesday at Drouot, conducted by the Oger-Dumont group and by Hubert Le Blanc.

seemed to stand a fair chance of getting off the ground. Characterized by the use of yellow veneer satinwood, elm, ash — on which linear patterns in dark-brown wood stand out, it is associated with the reign of King Charles X (1824-1830). Some of it, however, was being produced under Louis XVIII, whose reign began in 1815 after the final fall of Napoleon L Nor is 1830 to be considered as a clear end to the period; the Charles X style lingered for a few years under Louis Philippe. Even so, it covered a limited span of time, and rarity should increase prices. In the early 1960s an intensive promo-tional effort was made by French dealers, backed up by art monthlies A discussion of reviving art such as Comaissance des Arts. not even keeping up with inflation. On Wednesday the proceedings started with the Oger-Dumont wares. The first item, a fireplace screen built like a porch with a projecting tablet of brackets to be used as writing desk, was a master-piece of early 19th-century cabinetmaking. The satinwood veneer, set off by amaranth-wood moldings, was superb. The screen went at 13,500 francs (now about $1,370).

It was succeeded by a pair of sofas called canapés pon boat-shaped design one end higher than the other, the long side, set against the wall, upholstered. The yellow wood, not identified by the experts, was inlaid with a Brazilian rosewood pattern of a rosette flanked by neo-Roman palmettes. Pairs are rare. At 66,000 francs, this pair was cheaper than it might have been in about 1970.

Next came a set of four tables gigognes, or nested tables, in satin-wood with black fillets around the rim. The set appears to have left the experts in some doubt as to its exact period, which was broadly stated as "19th century." The slen-der, columnar legs and the flat-tened, cusped arches at the top vouch, however, for its being from the Charles X period. The price. 13,500 francs, was more than rea-four bow-shaped legs. A small ovai tablet links the legs halfway up. The amaranth feet, carved like lion claws, and the capitals point to a period shortly after the Napoleonic era, perhaps around 1820. The ele-gance and the rarity of the model make the knock-down price of 27,000 francs a joke.

in another room. Among the earlier pieces was a large table, its round top supported by three sinuous legs terminating in ram heads. The dark-brown amaranth pattern of neo-classical inspiration, set off by the mellow golden veneer, is su-perb. So is the quality of the carved ram heads. The only flaw, literally, is a crack in the veneer on top. It may be impossible to repair the table to perfection, not even by stripping. This may account for the price - 44,500 francs.

No such excuse can be put forward regarding an excellent commode, whose two doors open to disclose three English-style sliding drawers. The palmette-and-scroll pattern in amaranth is the quintessence of Charles X design. The Rarest of all in the Oger-Du-mont sale was an oval table with price of $1,000 francs may be good as the market stands, but it does not do justice to the work.

The 19th-century masterpiece in this sale was another center table. Its hexagonal top rests on six bronze winged busts supported by tapering pillars that rise from a shaped base. A mixture of Empire influence and the English idea of the hexagonal top date it to 1815-1820. Its execution points to a great cabinetmaker - the name of Georges-Jacob-Desmalter springs to mind. Characteristically, it was

Enchanting 'Purple Rose' May Be Allen's Best Ever

By Vincent Canby New York Times Service
TEW YORK — Everything about Cecilia (Mia Farrow) is tinged with melancholy, including the time — the depressed 1930s and the place, a drab little New Jersey town where even the sunlight looks gray. Her husband, Monk (Danny Aiello), a big, shorttempered lug, isn't a bad sort, really, and, like almost every other man in town, he's out of a job and not looking for work. However, when to push her around a bit. Cecilia presents her objections to Monk in the form of extremely tentative observations: "All you do is drink and play dice and I wind up getting smacked." Replies Monk with reason: "I always warn you first." Cecilia is even a failure as a waitress in the town's single, very greasy spoon. It's no wonder that Cecilia, like millions of other Americans of her time, finds life on the silver screen not only preferable to but more real than the world around her. One day, after going through a bad patch at the diner and with Monk, she is sitting in the Jewel Theater, watching something called "The Purple Rose of Cairo" for the ump-teenth time, when the film's handsome, four-square juvenile, a pithhelmeted character named Tom Baxter (Jeff Daniels), steps down from the screen and into Cecilia's life. As Cecilia later confides to her sister, "I just met a wonderful man. He's fictional, but you can't have

To be blunt about it, "The Purple Rose of Cairo" is pure enchantment. It's a sweet, lyrically funny, multilayered work that again demonstrates that Woody Allen is the premier American filmmaker Standing something over 5 feet tall in his sneakers, he towers above all

"The Purple Rose of Cairo" is as fine as anything he's ever done, from "Take the Money and Run," "Annie Hall" and "Manhattan," through "Zelig" and "Broadway Danny Rose." Quite possibly it is his best. I would even go so far as to rank it with two acknowledged classics. Luis Buffuel's "Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie" and Buster Keaton's "Sherlock Junior," both of which it recalls though in no way imitates.

It also recalls Allen's own small classic of a story, "The Kugelmass Episode," about a professor of hunanities who becomes so infatuated with Madame Bovary that he finds himself inside the Flaubert novel making mincemeat of the

Though Allen does not appear in "The Purple Rose of Cairo," his work as writer and director is so strong and sure that one is aware of his presence in every frame. It does not overwhelm the contributions of the others, but illuminates them, particularly the glowing, funny performance of Farrow. It's as if this wonderful actress, in spite of her English stage credits and all her earlier films, was finally awakened only when Allen cast her in "A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy,

"Zelig" and, most spectacularly, "Broadway Danny Rose."

Economic 'Fundamentals' Seen as Keeping Dollar High

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

EW YORK — Is the high-flying dollar about to come down? Despite the erratic swings in the currency market this week, exacerbated by the statements and interventions of central bankers, the general view of traders and bankers around the world is that the "fundamentals" have not changed and that a steep downfall of the dollar is not

Those fundamentals include United States advantages over other major countries, such as a more dynamic economy, lower inflation, higher after-tax real returns on capital, a positive spread in interest rates, the size and diversity of the capital market and the nation's politi-cal stability, which makes it a safe haven in turbulent times. Those are the factors, opti-mists say, that have attracted such a huge influx of foreign capital, and nothing has happened to change them. Central banks can alter the daily flow of events but, as has happened before, this too will pass.

The capital to cover the American trade deficit is going to be harder to get.

But this may be a case of euphoria built on a mistaken view of what has brought the tidal wave of capital to this country.

The widening trade deficit of the United States has been the prime cause of the inflow of capital. For, as a matter of doubleentry balance-of-payments accounting, the deficit on current account, of which the biggest component is the trade deficit, must be offset by a surplus in the capital account, corrected for statistical discrepancies.

And, as the U.S. current account swung from a surplus of $6.3 billion in 1981 to a deficit of $103 billion in 1984, net private capital flows swung from an outflow of $24.4 billion in 1981 to an inflow of $91 billion in 1984.

Foreign direct investment in American industry, banking or real estate did not account for the big swing since, in 1981, net foreign direct investment in the United States totaled $23.1 billion and in 1984 only $20.7 billion; nor did foreign net purchases of United States securities, most importantly Treasury securities, which increased by just $12.3 billion from 1981 to

HE most important factors in the upswing of net foreign investment in the United States were the actions of American banks, which, as the Morgan Economic Quarterly notes, sharply reduced their new lending to foreigners as a result of the international debt problem, the drop in borrowing requirements of oil-importing countries and the faster growth of U.S. credit needs. In the last two years, this produced a turnaround of $78.9 billion, with the net outflow of $45.1 billion from American banks in 1982 becoming a net inflow of $33.8 billion in 1984.

But while the United States has been able in the last two years to pull in enough capital from abroad readily to finance its trade deficit and even bid up the dollar, it seems unlikely that this can continue for more than another year without a deterioration in the dollar's exchange rate. In January, as the Commerce Department reported Thursday, the United States sustained a $10.3billion trade deficit, 28 percent higher than in December, and Secretary Malcolm Baldrige estimated that the deficit for 1985 would reach about $140 billion.

The capital to cover that is going to be harder to get. For one thing, pressures are building on the government from American exporters — with hard-pressed farmers in the spotlight this week - to rescue them, whether through subsidies, import taxes, quotas or other forms of protection, or by pressing foreigners to speed up, and open up, their economies to U.S. goods.

Other fundamental factors also seem likely to push the dollar lower. A growing number of American economists expect a recession before the end of 1986, and that would have a powerful effect in reversing capital flows and driving the dollar down, (Continued on Page 11, Col. 3)

Dollar Continues Strong

Bolstered By Economic News

The Associated Press NEW YORK - The dollar turned in a mixed performance in hectic trading on world foreign ex-changes Friday as central banks intervened against the U.S. curren-cy for a third straight day. But analysts said trading had calmed down and that the dollar was showing considerable strength as a result of new signs of a healthy economy in the United States. The dollar rose in the Far East and during early trading in Europe before central banks dumped as much as $1.5 billion on currency markets. The dollar then bounced up and down before drifting lower in quiet trading by day's end.

Some foreign-exchange dealers said the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, which is the currency trader for the U.S. Treasury Department, was among the central banks taking part in the interven-tion. But, following usual policy, the New York Fed on Friday re-

David Arbesman, a first vice president at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. in New York, said he believed Friday's intervention was much smaller than the $1.5 billion widely reported by European mon-

fused to either confirm or deny

But Mr. Arbesman said that if the figures were right "it's a very strong signal for the dollar." He said that in the face of such action, the dollar should have been knocked even lower.

A strong U.S. economy, attractive returns on dollar-denominated investments and foreign investor confidence in the policies of President Ronald Reagan and the Federal Reserve chairman, Paul Volcker, all have contributed to the Currency dealers said the dollar was supported Friday by a Com-merce Department report that the main economic barometer for the United States, the Index of Leading Economic Indicators, shot up percent in January, the biggest jump since June 1983.

Late Friday in New York, the British pound fell to $1.0755 from $1.0760 Thursday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late rates Thursday, included: 3.347 Deutsche marks, down from 3.354; 2.866 Swiss francs, down from 2.8675, and 10.23 French francs, down from 10.24. The pound fell against the dollar in London, dropping to $1.0715 from $1.082 Thursday. Late dollar rates in Europe, compared with late rates Thursday, included: 3.3635 DM, up from 3.3225: 2.8775 Swiss francs, up from 2.8445: 10.265 French francs, up from 10.182; 3.804 Dutch guilders, up from 3.768, and 2.085.50 Italian lire, up from 2,070.

Japanese Women Struggle to Win Equal Opportunities in Business

By Susan Chira New York Times Service

TOKYO - When Mitsuko Anzai was 25 and still answering telephones and booking tickets for her travel agency employer, she took a step that astounded her colleagues: She asked for a

"My supervisor just stared at me with his mouth open," Miss Anzai said, smiling at the memory of 28 years ago. "He said he thought it would be too much for a woman to handle, and had never dreamed of giving me a responsible job. But he said he recognized my good work and would give me something when it opened up."

Six months later Miss Anzai found herself in charge of a team of eight people. Now, at 53, she is the highest-ranking woman in the Japan Travel Bureau, Japan's largest travel agency, running a 68-person office with annual sales of $19 million (5 billion yen) - the company's third most profitable branch,

In Japan, women who aggressively pursue promotions are the exception. More typical is a woman who has been a reporter for a Tokyo television station for 23 years, and has watched men younger than herself promoted above her.

"Even though I feel I should be promoted, I couldn't say so." she said. "I don't have end self-confidence. I think I am held back," she said, "but at the same time I wonder if my ability has been found wanting."

Most large companies in Japan will not hire women for anything but clerical work. The fastest-growing segment of the female work force is part-time workers, with average salaries of less than $2.50 an hour. Collegeeducated women have a hard time finding work, and when they do, they are often required to report early each morning to prepare tea.

Mitsuyo Yoshimura beads software development.

Over the years, there has been slight but steady trickle of women to management. Moreover, this spring, after nearly a decade of lobbying by the Minis-try of Labor's Women's Bureau, a bill on equal employment opportunity is expected to become

But the bill was fiercely opposed by Japanese employers, who managed to remove most of its sanctions. Government, they say, simply cannot legislate away

"We are frustrated that companies are always blamed for dis-crimination," said Hiroshi Kitamura, director of the personnel management division for the Japan Federation of Employers Associations. "This law asks us to treat women completely the same as men. We can't enact that kind of drastic change at one

Companies have traditionally assumed a paternal role. Not long ago, a male division manager of a large auto company found himself on his knees, bowing apologies to the parents of a female employee who had been jilted by a man in his division. The manager considered himself

According to the Ministry of Labor, in 1983, women accounted for about 35 percent of the salaried work force in Japan, yet only 6 percent of its managers. Moreover, female managers made up less than 0.1 percent of all working women in the coun-discuss their reservations about promoting women. "Even if a woman says she will work until retirement, if she falls in love, she could easily quit," said Mr. Kita-mura. "Generally, women lack loyalty to the groups to which they belong. They are extremely egotistical and individualistic."

U.S. Will Not Ask Japan to Renew Its Auto Quotas

WASHINGTON - President

Ronald Reagan said Friday that he would not interfere with the lifting of Japanese restraints on automobile sales to the United States and that he hoped for "reciprocal treatment" for American products.

The decision was expected to lead to an increase in less-expensive Japanese cars being sold in the United States, generally bringing down auto prices for U.S. consum-

"It is my decision not to urge the Japanese to extend their voluntary export restraints on automobiles to the United States," Mr. Reagan said in a brief written statement. "In taking this action, I hope that we can look forward to reciprocal treatment by Japan."

The United States and Japan recently agreed to discuss lowering Japanese trade barriers to U.S.made electronic and telecommunications equipment, forest products, medical equipment and pharmacenticals. Those talks still are in the pre-liminary stages and have not yet resulted in agreements that would permit greater U.S. exports to Japan, However, Marlin Fitzwater, a White House spokesman, said that Mr. Reagan's decision was not based on assurances from the Japanese that they would agree to accept more U.S. products.

The president's decision, Mr. Fitzwater said, was based on his conclusion that it was "in the best national interest of the United States." that it would benefit American consumers and that the U.S. auto industry, having recovered from a long recession, is now "able to compete in world markets."

The action also was consistent with the agreements and spirit of the last two economic summit con-

William E. Brock, the U.S. trade representative, predicted Thursday that without the restraints, sales of Japanese imports are likely to rise to 2.6 million a year.

Mr. Fitzwater said that the American auto industry sold 11.5 million vehicles, a 22.3-percent annual increase, at a profit of $7.6 billion through last September. Asked about the effect of the decision on employment in the U.S. auto industry, the spokesman cited a Federal Trade Commission study indicating 4,600 workers out of a work force numbering more than 700,000 would lose their jobs. Opponents of Mr. Reagan's de-

U.S., EC Agree On Steel Plan

BRUSSELS - The European Community and the United States agreed Friday to a compromise plan for settling a dispute over EC steel exports to America, the EC announced.

The EC's executive body said that 209,000 tons of steel pipes and tubes blocked in U.S. Customs warehouses since an import ban in December would be allocated on the basis of 65 percent to the community's 1985 U.S. export quota and 35 per-cent to its 1986 quota.

The EC had been demanding that the steel be divided evenly between these two years, while the U.S. had been pressing for almost all of it to be lumped into this year's quota.

The council called for further liberalization of the Euroyen bond market. It said it was meaningless to separate Euroyen bonds from other denominations because of the increasing use of swaps, which make foreign currency bonds effectively yen-denominated. On nonresident placements of

The council said it would be desirable for banks to issue Euroyen negotiable certificates of deposiwith maturities longer than the current limit of six months if the medium- and long-term Euroyen lending market is deregulated and expands. This would give banks stable fund-raising sources, it said. But the council calls for full consideration of domestic banking policy, which separates short- and

Complaint Against Hunts Took U.S. 5 Years to Compile

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A government complaint filed against Nelson Bunker Hunt and other big-money silver traders paints a picture of high international finance replete with secret Swiss bank accounts, wealthy Arab sheiks and meetings in Paris.

The detailed 46-page document, not counting 11 pages of charts and tables, reads like the skeleton of a best-selling novel.

Kathleen W. Hathaway, a spokesman for the Kathleen W. Hathaway, a spokesman for the Commodity Futures Trading commission, said it took investigators five years to put the case together because of a "complex trading pattern" that required extensive international travel to track.

The nine defendants include the Texas-based Hunt brothers. Nelson and W. Hebert, and Naji Robert Nahas, a Brazilian the commission characterized as another big silver player.

After a detailed listing of the people and an explanation of how the complicated silver futures market works, the complaint launches into what it calls a "summary of respondents' manipulative scheme."

inpulative scheme."

It says the defendants established a pattern starting in September 1979 of accumulating futures positions, using a procedure that kept the silver bullion "unavailable to the market." It said their trading "represented such a large demand for silver bullion over a period of a few months that the market was unable to meet their demand at non-artificial prices" and that they caused prices to "reach and remain at artificial levels" from September 1979 to mid-March of 1980.

March of 1980.

When market exchanges "took steps that threatened to upset the manipulative scheme," according to the complaint, the defendants "tried to neutralize the impact of the exchange actions upon their scheme by, among other things, opening new accounts in the names of other persons and entities."

The complaint says that Nelson Hunt met Mr. Nahas in Paris — introduced by Maurice Zilber, who trained horses for both of them — and that Mr. Hunt and Mr. Nahas subsequently agreed "to act together to force the price of and that Mr. Hunt and Mr. Ivanas subsequently agreed "to act together to force the price of silver higher."

After the Commodity Exchange Inc. in New York and the Board of Trade of the City of Chicago started steps to stabilize the silver market, the complaint says several of the defendants met in Zurich to discuss the silver market.

It said that the Hunts misled exchange officials about their intentions in a way that benefited their trading and also began to buy silver in foreign markets.

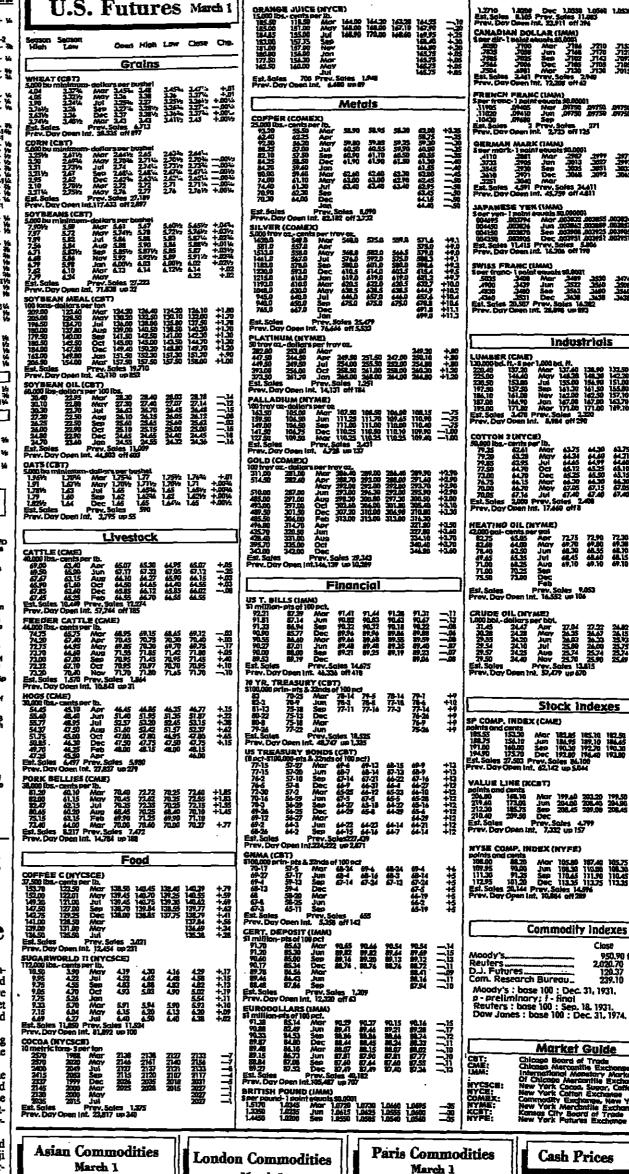

in foreign markets. "Through these and later purchases in Zurich and London, respondents increased their manipulative demand while avoiding the expension of the complete the complet changes' efforts to decrease it," the complaint said.

First Car Produced In Southeast Asia Shown in Malaysia United Press Interno

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia

— The Proton Saga, the first car produced in Southeast Asia and the product of a joint venture between Malaysia and the Japanese auto-maker Mitsubishi, was presented to the public Friday.

Official photographs showed a sleek four-door family automobile with a 1300-cubic-centimeter or 1500-cc engine, similar to a Mitsubishi Lancer Fiore. The car will retail for about $9,000 when the first models roll off the assembly line July 1.

The $230-million joint venture was a pet project of Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamad, who is anxious to accelerate industrialization to bolster the country's traditional commodity-based economy against turbulent world markets.

The car's engine, gearbox and running gear will be wholly Japanese. It will be built by Otomobil Nasional Sdn Bhd (Proton) at a newly built plant in Shah Alam near Kuala Lumpur.

The company is 70-percent owned by the government's Heavy Industries Corp. with the remaining share split between Mitsubishi Motors Corp. and Mitsubishi

Bill D. Ross has written that book. I consider it the best book on a campaign and on a fighting force, in this case the Marines, since Alan Moorhead's course, an American battle; losses on the Somme and at Verdun in World War I were much higher than the Iwo Jima totals. Understandably, Ross ponders the motivation, the training, the morale that enabled the Marines to carry on day after day under a hail of shells, mortar ibs, machine-gun and rifle fire. He does a good job but no writer really can plumb the inner work-ings of the infantryman's mind although some good ones, and Ross is among them, have tried. To today's readers the behavior of the Marines on Iwo Jima probably seems incredible. The author tries to explain why they were able to do what they did by giving a detailed description of the training of new Marines in boot camp. It tells us a great deal about why they were able to fight and win at Iwo Jima, but not all. Great fighting units like the Marines and the Guards develop out of tradition and pride as much as from 20-mile hikes with full

Why was the battle of Iwo Jima fought at all? The question arises out of the stark figures of casualties. The answer is that the island's airfields would provide a launching pad for the Air Force's assault on Japan. Does this suffice when, today, we know that work on the first atomic bomb was nearing completion? This generation's answer will probably be no. War, however, has its own dynamics. Looking dents return on these pages: the flag planted on Mount Suribachi, the Kamikazes sweeping down on the Saratoga in a raid that cost the lives of 717 sailors, the cry, "The Old Man's Got It" when a commander is killed. To those who, regrettably, know the face of bat-tle, Iwo Jima reinforces the memory of the dull, stupid horror they know war to be. For those who do not, the book is required reading if for no other reason that it will show them what Americans are

The first casualties stunned the high command. By nightfall on Feb. 21 American casualties on Iwo Jima were 644 killed, 4,108 wounded and 560 missing. This in 51 hours of fighting. "There was no doubt," the author writes "that Marines were in the

5 Nations Rugby Is Still Up for Grabs

By Bob Donahue tional Herald Tribune

DUBLIN - Both rugby sides think Ireland's green team has better than an outside chance to beat seasoned France on Saturday. And spring-like weather this past week tackles the old notion that Five Nations rugby spans the winter. That makes two wonders.

First the schedule. By early March in a normal year, eight of the annual 10 matches are past. One of the five teams has finished and first place may already be settled. More often, as happened last year, suspense is funneled toward a mid-March showdown on the fifth and final Saturday.

Well, March is upon us and seven matches remain. Wales has yet to play at all. The Five Nations round robin, in which each team plays twice at home and twice away, will go on till April 20, which is 13 days beyond Easter.

Snow in Dublin and frost in Paris prevented both matches on what was supposed to be opening day, Ian. 19. The two scheduled for Feb. 2 were played. Then snow in Car-diff prevented Wales vs. England on what would have been the third day, Feb. 16. Now we get Ireland vs. France and Scotland vs. Wales on the third day - or is it the how to ber that game."

There are few references to

The point is, it is not the fourth. McLain's past role as baseball star France is not in Dublin to complete its too confidently desired fourth grand slam since 1968.

During the long months after Scotland upset France in Edin-burgh last March 17, sewing up its first grand slam since 1925, the outlines of 1985 action settled hundreds of players on both sides ception.

of the Channel and in rugby com-munities around the world.

Scotland and France would be the teams to watch. And also Wales, which ended on an upswing in 1984. So the key matches in 1985 would be the three played among those three teams. The French, who occasionally looked first-rate on tour in New Zealand in June and July, would be all the more the 1985 favorites because they would play Wales and Scotland in Paris.

France vs. Wales looked like the big match and wasn't it too bad, one heard on all sides, that it came on the first day instead of the last. When Welsh lock Robert Norster, the best lineout jumper in Europe, had his jaw broken in a club match in December and was unavailable for Jan. 19. France's prospects looked all the better.

David Waters, a 29-year-old truck driver who has never played for Wales, was elated when he was picked to replace Norster in Paris, but the match had to be put off to March 30. Waters was picked again to play England, but the match was put off to April 20.

Now Norster has recovered and is in the Welsh team that faces Scotland in Edinburgh this weekend. Waters may be the only international rugby nonplayer ever to be picked twice.

Of the five coaches whose planning has been undone by the schedule changes, two are new - Scotland's Colin Telfer and Ireland's Mick Doyle. Four of the five capand Scotland's David Leslie. Iregradually into focus in the minds of land's Ciaran Fitzgerald is the ex-

The Scots, it was widely supposed, would go off the boil after peaking for their grand slam, but they would still give Wales a battle for second place behind France in 1985. That may still be the script, but meanwhile the no-hopers. Ireland and England, have helped the weather to confuse things.

The English, with nine newcomers, surprised everybody by holding. France to a 9-9 draw at Twickenham on Feb. 2; they are idie this weekend, with Scotland next on the schedule on March 16 at Twicken-

Also on Feb. 2 the Irish shocked Scotland with an 18-15 victory in Edinburgh. Forced to rebuild after a rash of retirements by long-serving forwards. Doyle has switched Ireland's style to a running attack. Right wing Trevor Ringland's two tries against Scotland were one more than whitewashed Ireland totaled in all four matches last year.

The upshot is that four teams enter March undefeated: France has won once and drawn once; Ireland has won once; England has drawn once: Wales has not played. The only team that has lost (twice) is the one, Scotland, that swept its four matches last year. The madean 1985 race is wide open.

Win or draw, none of the nine possible combinations of this weekend's results would be a surprise. The only surprise would be a big winning margin. But even that is a possibility —if, say, the French tains are also new - England's finally settle down and put points Paul Dodge, France's Philippe on the board to match their domi-Dintrans, Wales's Terry Holmes nation of play, as they failed to do nation of play, as they failed to do in New Zealand and again in their 11-3 victory over Scotland in Paris

Patrick Ewing — He Doesn't Just Block a Shot

By Tony Komheiser

Washington Past Service
NEW YORK — You've shaken your man, and you're on your way to the basket. Finding an opening, you commit yourself to the air, and suddenly you're staring up into the fearsome glare of 240 pounds of face, jaw and hands. Patrick Ewing, you presume. And the next thing you know, your shot is being swatted halfway to Australia. He is, as they say, a factor.

He has, as they say, a presence He doesn't just block a shot, he obliterates it. He doesn't just dunk the ball, he pile drives it. He is one tough hombre on that court. He is fiercely and aggressively competitive, and unlike so many big men, he's got enough mean in him to, like they say in baseball, back you off the plate a little.

Someone gets in his way, someone "don't feel so well." Ask Chris Mullin. Against St. John's in Georgetown's 85-69 victory Wednesday night, Ewing put a shoulder into his Olympic teammate Mullin's cheek away from the ball, and the first thing Mullin did — after scraping himself off the floor - was check to make sure he still had

The game Ewing had against St. John's at Madison Square Garden. proved conclusively that basketball is now, was then, and always will be a big man's game, and that while smaller men can sometimes control the action, only the big men can truly dominate it.

Whether it was Ewing's best game as a collegian is irrelevant, because his best games surely are to come. But he played a great game against the top-ranked team in the nation, on the road, in an atmosphere that couldn't have been any more highly charged if it had been plugged into the main generator at the electric plant. And he had that great game - 10 for 13 from the field, nine rebounds and six blocked shots against a team with three certain firstround NBA draft picks - at the express request of his coach, which is, when you consider the implications, scary in the extreme.

With Ewing seated at his right in the postgame interview, coach John Thompson recalled their pregame conversation: "I told him that we needed to win, and I said, 'I need you to play well.' That's the first time I ever said that to him. But it had gotten to the point where this game was important psychologically." Thompson put it on Ewing. Ewing put it to St. John's.

After the body count, Lou Carnesecca, the St. John's coach, shrugged and, referring to his value in the NBA draft, "We just put a few more dollars in the bank for him."

"I think the session will approve the recommendation of the Execu tive Board as always," Samaranch told a news conference. "I think we studied this problem very carefully and we propose to the session what is the best solution.

"We are following the desire of the international federations. I think the decision we took here in Calgary is a good step forward if we want to have Olympic events of a high standard. The Olympic movement must go with the times, it must move forward."

Samaranch was speaking after a series of Executive Board meetings with presidents of the six international Winter Olympic federations and officials of the Calgary Olympic Organizing Committee.

Tennis was a straight forward decision, the format being the same used when tennis was a demonstration sport at the Los Angeles Summer Ólympics.

However, hockey and soccer present problems.

National Hockey League players, barred from the 1984 Sarajevo Winter Games, can compete in the Calgary Olympics providing they are under 23 and come under the control of the IIHF for the duration of the Games. Cheerleaders Put on Hold

LOS ANGELES - Los Angeles Express football players, keep an eye on your helmets. Somebody may want to sell them." The Express, suddenly budget-conscious after a year of signing high-priced talent, is pulling the purse strings even tighter.

On Wednesday, the United States Football League team announced that it had, at least temporarily, fired coordinator Kathleen Lally and her entire Express cheerleading squad. Richard Stevens, the team's chairman of the board, carefully worded his explanation for the move. "We did not terminate the cheerleaders," he said. "We just put them on a leave of absence. On a team that obviously has financial problems, every dollar counts. So, in part, this was done for financial reasons. There may be cheerleaders at the next home game" March

The 28 Express cheerleaders each earn $35 a game. The Express has made no secret of its effort to limit spending. Before the season, it unloaded some big-salary talent — Kevin Mack, Lee Williams, Dewey Forte - to trim the payroll.

Sci-Fi Writers Split on 'Star Wars' Plan

By William J. Broad New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Science-fic-

ntion writers are engaged in a war of words over whether governments should stress peace or war in the development of space. What makes their debate of more than literary interest is that writers of science liction have foretold the advent of radio, television, tanks, helicopters, atom bombs, moon rockets, computers, robots, satellites and so on.

Now they are split into camps either supporting the Reagan ad-ministration's Strategic Defense Initiative, the so-called "Star Wars" defense against interconti-nental missiles, or urging alterna-tives such as cooperation in space with the Soviet Union.

As befits their status as 20thcentury seers, they and their opinions are being accorded careful attention by powerful individuals in and out of government, including President Ronald Rea-

"People are listening to science-fiction writers more than they did," said James Gunn, an expert in the genre at the University of Kansas. "An element of soapbox missionary work has existed in science fiction back to the days of H.G. Wells and Jules Verne. But today authors like [Isaac] Asimov, [Arthur C.] Clarke and [Robert A.] Heinlein have become credible advocates because as Asimov says, we live in a science-fiction world and people are just starting to realize

Heinlein and another writer, Jerry Pournelle, have been promoting the "High Frontier" pro-posed by a retired U.S. Army lieutenant general, Daniel O. Graham, in which hundreds of orbiting battle stations, some manned, would shoot down enemy missiles Pournelle and Dean Ing are co-authors of a recent book, "Mutual Assured Survival," an outline for space defense that Reagan hailed as "addressing with verve and vision the challenges to peace and to our national security."

Clarke, on the other hand, has testified in Congress against "Star Wars" and on behalf of
